Reading Paper

Read the text below and answer the questions that follow it.

Miss says I've got promise. She spends half the lesson just teaching me - she doesn't bother with the others half the time. They're always moaning (1) on about it.

“Can we have a go, miss? When's it our turn, miss? It's not fair, miss, just because he's a boy, miss ...”

“Shut up, Debbie, I'm busy.”

Oh, I was looking forward to the Saturday lesson all week. Once I started, I could just go on for ever. It was right what Miss said about stamina. It may look easy, but it's not. It's hard, but I could keep going for hours.

I must have been mad to go to ballet class instead of boxing.

It had to happen. Michael kept warning me. “Dad will find out. What are you going to do then?” I knew he was right, but I kept thinking, just this week, just one more lesson, then I’ll go back to the boxing. And I got more and more into it, and better and better at it, and Dad never turned up to watch me boxing any more… I just thought it was going to go on forever.

And of course, he unexpectedly turned up right in the middle of class.

“Pick up your leg, Billy. Swing it! Swing two three, round two three, up two three. What do you call that? Let’s have a bit of grace, Billy Elliot!”

I was swinging my leg round, slow circle, trying to make it as smooth as cream—and I looked up and there was my dad standing in the door.

Christ! I just froze. I thought I was going to die. I thought he was going to rush out and kill me. Miss was still going on… “Up two three, swing two three. Like a princess, Deborah. Beautiful necks! One two three…what’s up with you?” She said that when she saw me standing still. Then the music stopped and she turned round and saw Dad. He’d gone blood red. “You! Out! Now!” he snapped.

I could see her out of the corner of my eye, leaning forward towards him as if she could eat him. The last thing I wanted was a screaming match between her and my dad. I started walking towards him. “Please, miss. Don't,” I hissed (2) as I went past. It was so embarrassing. Dad thought I was a wimp for dancing; she thought I was a wimp for not standing up to him. I'd had it.

The door banged behind me. He grabbed my arm and pushed me in front.

'Right, you've got some explaining to do,' he said. And he marched me home.
